written treatment.

Mortality, morality, our existential purpose, and creation are all explained through various mythologies and cultures. Man roots and projects their greatest insecurities within these myths: fear, anxieties of the unknown, and ultimately, our incessant need to fully understand the environment we live in. Focusing on this idea, mythology will be explored through the lens of technology by taking a look at humanity's usage of it. This provides an objective view of what mythology means.

Isolated creatures. Haunted by their own consciousness, one that manifests existential dread. They rely on elaborate myths filled with common motifs and allegories to ease these anxieties. A distraction from the unknown. The unexplained, once understood, holds no power over the meek minded. Creation, natural occurrences, mortality, all stripped of their potency. They seek guidance: The ending of their meandering suffering. They seek security in self. They seek to know the answers by questioning the world around them, but never take the time to look within. For God did not create mankind, mankind created god.
